East Coast, Italy

The Amalfi coast lead us to Sorrento. Sorrento is a charming city with very narrow and busy streets. We stayed in Sorrento for two nights, taking one day to visit Pompei, a city that was uncovered after being buried by the eruption of Mt. Vesuvius in approximately 79A.D. We enjoyed an “enchanted” evening at a Sorrentine restaurant for dinner our final night as we listened to live Italian music. - Cheryl and Wayne

Overlooking the Bay of Sorrento.

A cliffside residence.

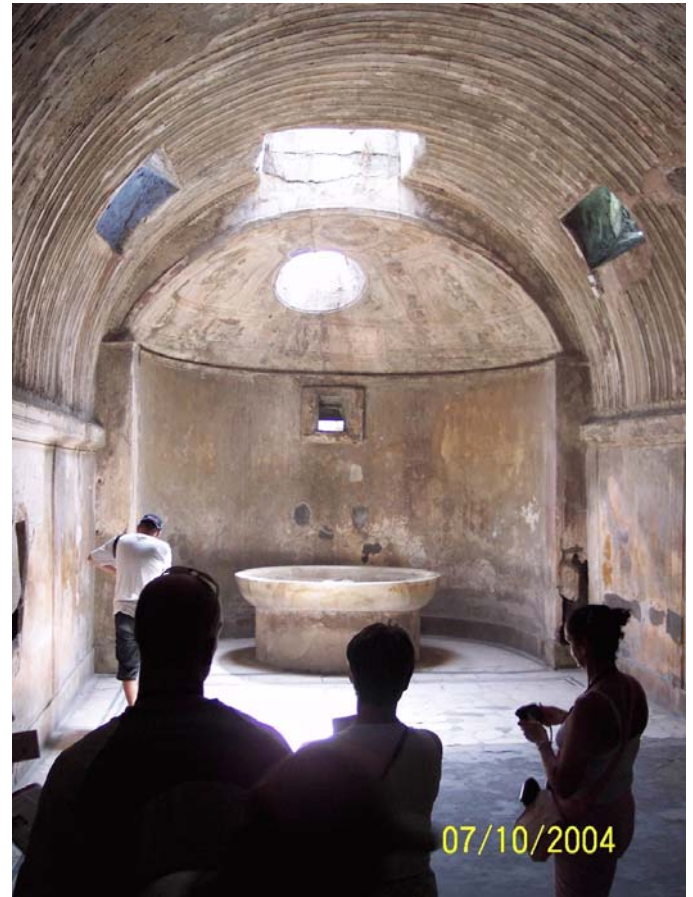

A view of Mt Vesuvius as we drive to Pompei.

The uncovered remains of Pompei. The “old” city of Pompei” is surrounded by the “new” city of Pompei.

A fresco that survived after being buried for 1800 years.

The uncovered Roman baths.

An elevator will take you down the cliff to the beach and restaurant below in Sorrento.

A long, narrow, and winding tunnel is an alternate route to the beach and restaurant at the bottom of the cliff. We opted to take the interesting walk.

We end the day with a beer at sunset. Truly - la dolce vida!
